Letter from the Editor-in-Chief

Dear business owner,

Thank you for your consideration and support of The University Star. The University Star, Texas State University’s student news organization, is financially and editorially independent from the university. Because of our independence, it is imperative that The University Star sell upwards of $100,000 of yearly advertisements to cover all expenses and operating costs, such as printing newspapers, software subscriptions, distribution fees and the payment of all editorial staff.

Without this revenue, The Star would no longer be able to serve the growing Texas State community of over 50,000 students through our weekly content centered on San Marcos and Texas State. If we were to rely on the university for these necessary funds, we would be unable to maintain our financial and editorial independence, which would affect The Star’s ability to hold Texas State administration and community officials accountable.

The University Star reaches thousands of San Marcos residents and Texas State students, staff and alumni, and averages over one million page views online annually. The power of advertising is a familiar concept to the business owner, so I’m certain you understand the value of working with the only news organization that serves the specific community of Texas State.

We understand the commitment that comes with spending your earned money to advertise with us, so the Star thanks you for any past, current or future contributions you have made or will make to this organization.

Without your belief in student media, our work would not be possible.

Sincerely,

Carson Weaver
